G3 Canada Limited operates a network of grain elevators in Western Canada that is setting new standards for fast and efficient movement of grain, and a network of port terminals in Eastern Canada.

G3 is transforming how grain moves across Canada and to customers around the world with its network of state-of-the-art facilities.

At G3's high-efficiency Western Canada grain elevators, they unload trucks in minutes and load trains under continuous motion on loop tracks in a matter of hours.

Poll question

Does your organization have a formal business process management program?

Yes, we have a center of excellence that drives continuous process innovation across the organization

Process initiatives are project based and resourced accordingly

Process management is left to the various departments with inconsistent results across the organization

There is little to no focus on process management at our company, reactive at best

What is Business process Management?

Business process management (BPM) is the set of skills and methods companies use to examine end-to-end processes and make them better.

Business processes are strategic and operational assets that must be understood and actively managed to create sustainable value for an organization.

In today's world, BPM underpins Digital Transformation by providing a blueprint for optimization and automation.
